Ginsburg was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1933. She graduated from Cornell University and Columbia Law School, where she was one of only nine women in her class. After graduating from law school, Ginsburg clerked for Justice Felix Frankfurter of the Supreme Court. She then taught law at Rutgers University and Columbia Law School, where she became the first tenured female professor.

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter appointed Ginsburg to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. She served on the D.C. Circuit for 13 years, where she wrote numerous opinions that advanced the cause of gender equality. In 1993, President Bill Clinton appointed Ginsburg to the Supreme Court. She was the second woman to serve on the Court, after Sandra Day O'Connor.

Ginsburg was a prolific writer and speaker. She authored hundreds of opinions and dissents, many of which were landmark decisions that expanded the rights of women and minorities. She also spoke out frequently on issues of gender equality and social justice. In her speeches, Ginsburg argued that women should be treated as equal to men under the law and that everyone deserves a fair chance to succeed.

Ginsburg was a role model for women and girls around the world. She showed us that anything is possible if you work hard and never give up on your dreams. She was a tireless advocate for justice, and her legacy will continue to inspire us for generations to come.
