The Celestial City

Dr. Smith unveils heaven as a tangible and magnificent city, described in the book of Revelation as the "New Jerusalem." Its walls shimmer with precious stones, and its streets are paved with pure gold. The city is illuminated not by the sun or moon but by the radiant glory of God, casting an eternal radiance upon its inhabitants.

Life in Heaven

The author paints a vivid portrayal of life in heaven, where there is no sorrow, pain, or death. The inhabitants, known as saints, are clothed in white robes and adorned with crowns, symbolizing their triumph and purity. They engage in unceasing worship, praising God for His boundless love and grace.

The Throne of God

At the heart of the celestial city lies the throne of God. Described in the book of Revelation as a magnificent jewel-encrusted seat, it is the epicenter of heaven's power and authority. From this throne, God reigns eternally, dispensing justice and mercy upon His creation.

The River of Life

Flowing through the city is the river of life, a crystal-clear stream that symbolizes the boundless blessings bestowed upon the inhabitants of heaven. Its banks are lined with the tree of life, whose leaves provide healing and nourishment.

Heaven's Inhabitants

Dr. Smith emphasizes that entrance into heaven is not limited to a select few. Rather, it is open to all who have accepted Jesus Christ as their Savior and have lived a life in accordance with His teachings. The author explores the concept of salvation, explaining how faith in Christ enables us to overcome sin and inherit eternal life.

Heaven's Purpose

Beyond its physical splendor and blissful existence, heaven serves a profound purpose. It is the place where we will fully experience the love and glory of God. It is a realm where we will be reunited with loved ones who have gone before us and where we will be forever free from the burdens and sorrows of our earthly existence.
